The first 100 days – how are we doing at GDS?

Government Digital Strategy, published in November 2012. You may have read in earlier posts that the strategy set out 14 actions for departments to respond to. It was followed up in December 2012 by departmental digital strategies, where each department set out their own detailed plans and commitments on how they would transform and improve their services to meet user needs better and achieve savings. An ambitious agenda. So...

Introduction

I am the Executive Director of Digital in the Cabinet Office, which sits at the centre of Government and has the overarching purpose of making Government work better. I joined in July 2011, and spent the first several months in Government creating the Government Digital Service (GDS). The GDS includes several parts of the Government's digital estate:

DirectGov, BusinessLink, Innovations, Digital Policy, the beta of GOV.UK and Digital Engagement. In addition, the GDS is developing the wider Government digital strategy,
